PATRICK HENRY.

The Life and Career of a Famous American Patriot.

THE MAN OF THE PEOPLE. His Appearance as an Orator in the Virginia House of Burgesses.

As the scene which took place on this occasion was quite a remarkable one I will describe it.

You will remember what I said about the English law called the "Stamp Act," which ordered that the Americans should not transact business unless all the papers had a certain stamp upon them. As you have been told, this produced a great excitement in the colonies. It was regarded as an open attempt to make them the slaves of England, as they were not represented by any of their own people in the Parliament which made the law, and when the stamps came over they were so angry that

They were a grave and imposing body, very different from the plain countrymen whom he was accustomod to in Hanover. Their dress and appearance indicated their rank in society. On all sides were powdered heads and ruffled shirts, and taces es and yarn stockings. In short, he was exactly the same awkward-looking countryman as before.

As he rose in his place, the Burgesses turned their heads and looked at him. They scarcely knew his mame, and no doubt thought it presumptuous in this plainly dressed young man to be taking the lead, and telling older persons what was best to be done. But Patrick Henry paid no attention to their looks of surprise. He had made up his mind to say what he had to say, and give his own opinion at least on the subject of the Stamp Act. He spoke in a quiet tone and was listened to in deep silence. The Stamp Act was illegal and oppressive to Virginia, he said; and he therefore moved that the House of Burgesses should pass the resolution he was about to read to them. He then read the resolutions, which he had written on a blank leaf torn out of an old law book. The tone of them was respectful, but there was no doubt what they meant, as the last of them declared that no one had the right to tax Virginia but the Virginia Burgesses.

The resolutions were looked upon as violent and very imprudent. They, in feet asserted that the third when he do

Virginia Burgesses.

The resolutions were looked upon as violent and very imprudent. They, in fact, asserted that the King had no right to levy taxes in Virginia, which was very such like rebellion; and several speakers at once rose, and denoused them as highly injudicious. There was a violent excitement as one after another spoke against the resolutions, and then Patrick Henry rose to defend them.

His whole appearance had changed, and the Burgesses soon found that the poorly clad young countryman was a matchiess speaker, and superior to all of them. His head was carried erect, and his stooping figure grew straight as an arrow. His eye flashed, and his vaice rolled through the hall like thunder. He was fully aroused, and denounced England in terms of the bitterest insult. Why were English people better than Virginians? he asked. What right had the Parliament to tyraurize over the e Parliament to tyrannize over the lonies? And as to the Eing of igland, he had better look to his

"Caser had his Brujus," he ex laimed; "Glaries the First his Crom rell, and George the Third—"

Henry's wonderful eloquence had swept away everything. When the House was called upon to say wheth-er the resolutions should pass or not, they were passed—the last and most important of them by a single vote.

The Burgesses then adjourned in the midst of general excitement. One of them rushed out, declaring that he would have given five hundred guineas for a single vote, in order to defeat the resolutions. But the people were delighted to hear that they had passed. As Henry pushed through the crowd, a plain countryman slapped him on the shoulder and exclaimed:

"Stick to us, old fellow, or waste." "Stick to us, old fellow, or we are

been told, this produced a great excitement in the cotonics. It was regarded as an open attempt to make them the slaves of England, as they were not-expessented by any of their own people in the Parliament which made the law sand when the stamps came over they were so angry that they seized upon them in many particularly the stamps was very great. Some people said that as, the colonies belonged to England, and the Kisg had authority over them, they ought not to refuse to object the law, but to write a pelition asking the King to change it, and that this petition should be as respectful as possible. But others said that such petition should be of no use. They had been tried over and over, and two each thing to do now was to tell the King palanly that no one on earth had right to tax Virginians except the Virginia liouse of Burgesses.

The Burgesses soon met at Williamsburg. It was in the year 1755, two years after Patrick Henry's great speech against the parsons; and, as I have told yon, he was a member of the House. Every one soon saw that there would be an exception when the sump would be an exception would be an expective were registed in the Burgesses knew that something would have to be done. They were generally rich men, with large farms and lived in great style. They loved England, for the Virginia popole had never for gotten that their fathers and they were proved of their blood. They were proved of their blood. They were quite willing that the seep you can on the would be far better, they had been treed to the flouse. Every one soon saw that there would be an excelled the Burgesses knew that something would be a rectiled to the particle flow, the seep the seep the law, but to got the seep the law, but to got the law, but to got the seep the law, but to got the seep the law, but to got the law but the Stand Act, and the law but the stand of the law but the massion. It would be far better, they thought, to petition the King to do them justice, than to tell him in plain words that they would not obey him.

When Patrick Henry reached Willamsburg he found that this was the general way of shinking. Scarcely a single member of the Burgesses was ready to act promptly. They still hoped for a "redress of grievances" as it was called, by sending a petition to the King; but Patrick Henry had made up his mind that this would do no good. He, therefore, determined to act boldly, and soon after the House assembled he rose to address them. the writer may be egotistical, some of the hardest work which he has ever done has been from the early dawn till after a breaktast in bed. Of all sleep in the world there is none on the world there is none of the world there is none of the world there is none of the world there is none or the world there is no the world the wor appearance indicated their rank in society. On all sides were powdered heads and ruffled shirts, and taces full of dignity. They were almost all large landholders, accustomed to be treated with the highest respect; and the contrast between them and Patrick Henry was very striking lile was as rough looking as ever. His hair was unpowdered, and he wore a faded old coat, leather breeches and yarn stockings. In short, he was exactly the same awkward-looking countryman as before.

As he rose in his place, the Burgesses turned their heads and looked JOBBERY. A bit of Republican Theft. $88.000 paid to collect $80.000. [Courier-Journal. Senator Beck, in his recent speech

Senator Beck, in his recent speech on the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, pointed out a leak which the Republican Administrations have taken special pains to keep in operation for the purpose of rewarding favorites for political services. That leak is in the customhouse system. Out of the one hundred and twenty-eight entom-houses, there are thirty-six whose expenses rage from $1,000 to $20,000 over and above the receipts. There are thirteen custom-houses in Maine, alone. In twelve of these establishments the collections aggregate $80,000 and the employers are paid $88,000. The Portland custom-house is the only one that pays expenses in Maine, at the Frenchman's Bay custom-house, the sum total collections is $6.78; yet there are situated there a horde of officials who cost the country over $5,000. At New Orleans, where the custom-house has been used almost exclusively for political purposes, the collections are $1,747,339,69; but to collect it there is expended $279,759-04. The St. Louis custom-house collections are $1,747,339,69; but to collect it there is expended $279,759-04. The St. Louis custom-house collections are $1,747,339,69; but to collect it there is expended $279,759-04. The St. Louis custom-house collections are $1,747,339,69; but to collect it there is expenses are only $39,582.53. So on through the list presented by Senator Beck there are evidences of the waste of the public funds for political services. The net receipts at the one hundred and twentwenty-eight custom houses are $126,679,521.85, and it takes over $6,000,000 to collect that amount, and that is about ten times greater than it ought

"Treason!" came from every part of the hall; but Henry did not shrink.

"And George the Third may profit by their example!" he added. "If this be treason, make the most of it!"

He took his seat after uttering these brave words, in the midst of great excitement. It was plain that his speech had made a strong impression. Speech after speech was made—some in favor in ave ever yet acquired.

2.80 Inder its control. Another illustration of the beauties of Radical pretentions is the memorial of the Rhode
2.00 Island soldiers, presented by Senator McDonald a day or two since. Senator Anthony, who has wasted a great deal of breath in trying to create an impression that the Democrats are unfriendly to the Union soldier, now impression that the Democrats are unfriendly to the Union soldier, now turns up not only as the author and finisher, so to speak, of election frauds in his State, but charged with procuring the removal of soldiers from Federal positions to secure their places for his own relations. The election frauds charged are in the nature of interference by these appointees. It would seem that in a State where only a select few are allowed to vote—on account of the property qualification required—it would not be necessary to resort to such faction to keep it in line. With a population of 274,000, Rhode Island cast but 17,000 votes last year, and the largest -vote ever polled in the State was 25,000, at the Presidential election of 1876. Yet on this population the State gets two members of Congress, with over 50 per cant. of her voters disfranchised. This leaves the control of the State in the hands of a Radical clique who have, by office-holding, etc., accumulated property enough to give them the franchise. With just laws, like the rest of the free States, Rhode Island would mighty soon leave the Radical column, and the leaders of the party know it. Yet these are the men who want to regulate and dielate to the rest of the rountry.

men who want to regulate and dic-tate to the rest of the country. There has been more or less agita-tion for some time over a proposition now before Congress to change the control of the Government Printing 2.00 Office. For sixteen years or so this immense establishment has been in much the same hands, and as a consequence, rings and combinations have grown up, which are like such things everywhere, not conducive to the reputation of the management.
